Pumps for Salvage of Oil Cargoes from Stranded Tankers N. P. Oldson, A. L. Scott, NAVAL CIVIL ENGINEERING LAB PORT HUENEME CALIF., United States. Naval Ship Systems Command, 1970 The Supervisor of Salvage requested a study of methods for pumping cargo oil from stranded tankers and an evaluation of a submersible 25-hp salvage pump modified to pump oil and other viscous liquids. An investigation was made of the advantages and disadvantages of centrifugal and positive displacement pumps; strengths and head losses through oil transfer hoses of different sizes; power requirements, electric, hydraulic, and pneumatic drives for salvage pumps; and heat required to lower cargo-oil viscosities for salvage. A 25-hp centrifugal salvage pump with modified, interchangeable impellers was tested in oils of various viscosities to determine its capability for pumping various types of oil in cargo salvage operations. It was found that for the required salvage operations the most practical salvage pump would be an electric, submersible, 18-hp pump capable of operating at 24 hp for limited periods, the modified submersible 25-hp salvage pump is satisfactory for salvaging oil cargoes if the steady-state temperature of the motor windings is limited to 140C, a 6-inch-diameter hose system should be used, and the standard 30/40-kw generator should not be expected to supply power to more than one 25-hp salvage pump when viscous oil is pumped. (Author).

Marine and Offshore Pumping and Piping Systems J. Crawford, 2016-02-03 Marine and Offshore Pumping and Piping System covers the history, application, installation, maintenance, and safety of different pumping and piping systems. The book covers topics such as pumping arrangements, especially in machinery spaces; water ballast, oil fuel, feed, and cooling water systems; and piping systems for oil and chemical tankers. Also covered are topics such as the arrangements in liquefied gas carriers and fuel gas and coal burning; the required arrangements and systems for specialized ships and its related regulations; the automation of control systems; piping designs, and offshore services. The text is recommended for marine engineers who would like to know more about the pumping and piping systems on ships and offshore services, as well as their arrangements.
